You marked for my perusal the "Town Pump," and I assure you it brought up so many receilections of my boyhood that the impulse was to both laugh and cry. Laugh at the incoence of my youth as I stood at the old iron pump handle, on the east-ide of the marketsquare near the angine house on Fairfax street, and handle, on the east-side of the marketsquare near the engine house on Fatrax street, and my almost ready compliance at the suggestion of my cuoning companion, to put my tougue upon the handle on a very cold frosty morning. It was at this pump that I stood in line for several bours passing fire buckets to the engine when Newton's stables were burned. We were dismissed from school, I remember, by Mr. Pierpoint on account of this large fire, and observing me on duty, be commended me on the following day for my conduct. It was ac seldom he scaled, still conduct. It was so seldom be smiled, still less to compliment or approve a boy for do-ing a commendable set, that I appreciated it and have borne him in mind ever since, though 50 years have slaped. My principal recollection, and around which cluster so many memories, was the old 'diagonal pump.' It furnished us with the purest water, spring like, and in the heat of summer cool to that degree that when drank from the pump it made the boys and families in the immediate neighborhood independent of the ice house. Our family and your own were not dependent upon the town water cart, but were supplied by old Frank Washington, who made daily trips and two on Saturday with nous inthe "surface water cart drawn." with your father's private water cart, drawn by our grandfather's horse, old Screamer,

The mistake was simply in the year, which was 1841 and not 1848, as he states. Heft Alexandria December 2, 1843, and the tragedy happened about two years previous to my departure. I remember appearing upon the scene on the morning after the accident, and looking down the hole through which the boy disappeared. The proof was his umbrolls, which he held over his head (for it was raining at the time), and which covered the hole. With the lapse of time, enlightenment of the people, and more liberal education, the old Sabbatarian laws of Alexandria, which forbade the fishing up of the body of the poor boy, have, thank God, passed away. To BE REMARRIED .- Frank Stimson and Mary Ballman were married in Asheville, N. C., in 1865. Subsequently Stimson secured a divorce from his wife. Five years ago Mis. Stimson, accompanied by her two children, went to Georgia and located in Camden county. She bought a small farm which was tended by her son, aged 19 years. Soon after Mrs. Stimson left her old home the former husband married again, and one year afterward his second wife died. Stimyear afterward his second wile died. Sita-son found the life of a widower not a pleas-aut one, and he cast his eyes about for au-other companion. When he thought of his first wife the old love revived, and he wrote to her, pleading for a renewal of their love. Stimson was successful and will marry his divorced wife some time next month.
